Hodgson makes Canucks main camp

MATT JAMES

Staff Reporter

Cody Hodgson's recent to do list:

- Get drafted into the NHL: ✓
- Get invited to NHL rookie camp: ✓
- Shine at rookie camp: ✓
- Get invited to Vancouver Ca-nucks main camp: ✓
- Make the Vancouver Canucks hockey team: to be decided

It is the last question that's the most exciting question for 18-year-old Cody Hodgson, and it's one that the Haliburton native should have answered by the end of the month.

Hodgson flew to Vancouver on September 10 to attend the Canucks rookie camp. "It's been pretty busy but pretty productive."

Hodgson arrived in Vancouver a day before camp began in order to get accustomed to the three-hour time change and he felt it helped his all-round performance.

"When I first got here it was a little bit surreal," he said in a telephone interview from his hotel room. "After meeting all the guys you realize these are the guys you have to compete against too, so reality kind of hits. I'm here to play hockey and that's the goal."

New CEO ready to make health services number one

MARTHA PERKINS

Editor

Haliburton Highlands Health Services has the potential to be the best health care agency in the province, says the man who's just been hired to take over the helm.

"My goal initially is to get to know the community and get the community to know me," Paul Rosebush said in a telephone interview with the Echo a few days after HHHS announced he had been appointed as its new president and CEO. "Then it's to have an open and transparent organization, maintain a financially stable organization and make sure everyone has access to high quality care.

"I want [HHHS] to be number 1, and I think it's achievable."

At present, Rosebush is the CEO of the Hay River Health and Social Services Authority in the Northwest Territories. He's responsible for an organization that's bigger than HHHS but also very similar in that it offers a wide variety of health-care services, as well as child and family services. In Hay River, he embraced technology as a way of improving services for residents in a rural region with limited resources and is in the midst of a reorganization process to make sure the agency is providing the best services he can.

He moved to the north one year ago because of the sense of adventure. "All Canadians should experience the North," he says.

The 47-year-old CEO told the Hay River Hub that he was very sad to be leaving Hay River but when the possibility of working at HHHS became available, "It's a career opportunity I couldn't resist."

Not only does it bring him closer to family in Peterborough but it's a "breathtaking" area with a

Wash out

Property owners were dismayed when a section of the Blue Heron Road near Redstone Lake washed out on Sunday afternoon, fearing they wouldn't be able to leave that night. But thanks to the quick response of the Dysart roads department, a lane was created a few hours later. The flooding was caused by a broken beaver dam.

"Love is everything," says musician Carl Dixon, who came extremely close to dying in April. By sheer will and determination, he's fought his way back to good health. "I have a lot to live for. I couldn't have just checked out and left my girls behind. Love gives you meaning in your life."

Lucky to be alive, happy to be home

Carl Dixon has made remarkable progress since his car crash in Australia in April

MARTHA PERKINS

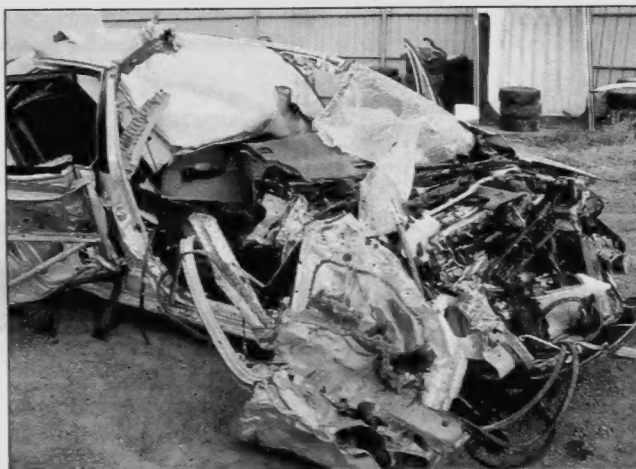

Editor

CARL DIXON IS PERCHED on a stool in the backyard of his home near West Guilford. He's got an acoustic guitar on his lap and is wondering what to play next. His wife Betty Ujvari senses his indecision, looks over at him and smiles. Think of it as a modern-day "Play it again, Sam" moment when she requests a song he's played for her a hundred times before: Pinball Wizard.

"Ah," Dixon says softly. He puts his guitar in place and starts with a few simple chords before picking up speed and intensity. "Ever since I was a young boy, I've played the silver ball..." he sings, closing his eyes as The Who's music and lyrics merge. He doesn't falter or play a wrong note. Listening to him, you know why he's been lead singer with bands such as Coney Hatch, April Wine and The Guess Who. This man can sing.

But on this late summer day it doesn't matter that there are only a few dozen people – fellow Canoe FM volunteers – listening to him. It means as much for him to play in front of this small crowd as it does to stand at the front of a stadium filled with thousands of screaming fans. Music has never been about fame or adulation or image for Carl Dixon. Music is simply who he is.

Four months earlier, few people would have believed that this moment would be possible. The police officers and paramedics who arrived on the scene of his horrific car accident in Australia didn't think he'd even make it to the hospital. The doctor who led Betty into the surgery before he started to operate on Dixon's mangled body gently let her know it would be a good idea if she said her goodbyes.

Emergency personnel who responded to Carl Dixon's car crash thought he'd never be able to survive his injuries. His wife, Betty Ujvari, gives some of the credit to his instinctive knowledge that he had to keep himself awake during the two hours it took to release him from his mangled Toyota Corolla.

But from the moment Ujvari knew about the accident, she also knew her husband would survive. She didn't know if he'd be blind, missing a few limbs or be permanently brain damaged, but she knew he'd live because he was strong and he loved his family and wouldn't want to leave them. She was ready to cope with whatever the fates decided and, because he was her best friend, she'd help him and love him every step along the way.

That's what makes this outdoor "concert" in their backyard so deeply meaningful and moving. It means Carl Dixon is home in Haliburton again. It means that his brain can find all the notes and his hands can play them. It doesn't mean that the struggles have ended but at least the goal of returning to his life as a musician doesn't have to seem so far away.

Night had fallen when Dixon left the recording studio in Melbourne on April 14. He was there to lay down some tracks to a song for the television show Saddle Club, which his 12-year-old daughter Lauren was in the midst of filming.

A freeway led him out of the city but soon he was driving his Toyota Corolla along a quiet country road towards Daylesford, where Lauren and Betty were living during the filming of the show. There were no lights, no other cars – no visual reminders that Australians drive on the other side of the road. Dixon was in the right-hand lane when he went around a blind corner – directly into the path of an oncoming SUV. The SUV's driver couldn't avoid the impact, which was so severe that it caused the SUV to use the Corolla as a ramp to become airborne. As the Dixons would later say of Carl's injuries, what would you expect when you're hit by a flying car?

Accident puts family into action mode

While many factors contributed to his survival, including being treated by the top medical staff in Melbourne, it's likely Dixon's alive today because he forced himself to stay awake during the two-hour ordeal of being extricated from his car.

"Carl went into the accident in extremely good physical condition," Ujvari says. "He eats healthily, he's in shape, he doesn't drink, doesn't smoke." She turns to him and give him a gentle smile. "This rock star is as pure as the driven snow."

Although Dixon doesn't remember anything, Ujvari says, "He'd know that if he didn't keep babbling he'd slip into a coma and die."

"He'd have been thinking of his two girls and his wife and probably say to himself, 'Oh shoot, Betty's going to kill me. If I die I'm in so much trouble.'"

Dixon says he's always been self-sufficient, believing he can do anything he sets his mind to. Tears well up when he adds, "Love is everything. I have a lot to live for. I couldn't have just checked out and left my girls behind. Love gives you meaning in your life."

Dixon usually kept in touch with his wife during the ride to Daylesford so when Ujvari hadn't heard from him she knew something was wrong. Her heart started racing and her thoughts were keeping the same beat. The tempo increased when an ambulance raced past the house.

Even before she got the call that she knew was coming, she was preparing to be by her husband's side. He had fallen instantly in love with her nearly 20 years ago and they'd found a way to balance their differences to the point they were in perfect harmony. Her career in bank management had put steel underneath the softer sides of her personality and while she was her rocker musician's biggest fan, she was also the one who dealt with all the day-to-day practicalities that allowed him to think only about the music as he flew to concerts all over the world.

The phone call – "Mrs. Dixon? Your husband's been in an accident" – put her into organized response mode. Even as her heart was sinking because "my beautiful boy was hurt," she knew that she would have to deal with those emotions later. Now was the time to help her husband and collapsing into tears would only make things worse.

"I view myself as the kind of person people count on for solutions, resolution and action," she says. "I didn't shut down or panic. We just got busy."

She drove to the hospital in Melbourne, daughter Lauren sitting quietly by her side, both putting their energy into controlling their emotions.

At the hospital, the staff was "full on." But before they operated, they wanted to give Ujvari some time with her husband. The doctor handed her Carl's wedding ring. The underlying message was clear: it might be your last time together.

Her "sleeping angel" was on a stretcher covered with a sheet. In the corner she could see his bloodied jeans, which they had cut off, in a garbage can. There was also a pool of blood gathering below him.

"I crouched down and whispered in his ear that I loved him and that he's a fighter and I knew he'll survive this..."

"What haunts me now was not knowing what was happening beneath the sheets."

It was indeed what Ujvari couldn't see that had the doctors so worried. While the injuries could seem simple – broken bones, really – the extent and complexity of those breaks was overwhelming. Shattered bones were causing massive bleeding, which had to be stopped.

'Adversity doesn't reform character; it reveals character'

Over the next several hours, an array of specialists at the teaching hospital arrived in the quiet room where Ujvari and Lauren had been placed. Each doctor – each with his or her own specialty – explained what injury they were trying to cope with. "Each one had a bit of bad news."

One doctor didn't think they could save Dixon's right eye and, if the bleeding didn't stop, sight in his left one could be lost as well. Another was worried about the swelling in his brain while another was more concerned that the blood they kept pumping into Dixon's body wasn't coagulating. An orthopaedic surgeon, said it didn't look good for his right arm and his left leg was in danger too.

That's when Ujvari realized that while the medical staff was obviously committed to saving his life, she also needed them to save the person.

"You need to know," she told the surgeon, "that this man is a musician. It's the way he makes a living. It's his identity. You need to save his arm."

As she said later, "I figured he could still play guitar if he was blind and with one leg but he needed his right arm."

As she absorbed wave after wave of bad news, she kept her mind on the primary truth: "He's alive and anything over that is a bonus. He might lose two limbs, possibly be blind and have potential brain damage. If this is what we were left with, we'll deal with it. He's my best friend and you stand by your best friend."

"It's not a choice – and it's not that I don't have moments when you say, 'Well, this sucks.' But the one option that I was not prepared to contemplate was taking my husband's body home."

It would take three days of surgeries to take that option off the table. During those troubling hours, the thing that gave her most hope was a doctor's comment: "You think we'd be going to all this trouble if we thought he wouldn't survive?"

While Ujvari dealt with the medical issues, one of the line producers of the Saddle Club was also in full organizational mode. Commandeering a telephone at the intensive care unit's nurses' station, she set about arranging all the support the Dixons would need, including getting flights to Melbourne for the Dixon's older daughter, Carlin, who was back home in West Guilford 18,500 kilometres away, and Ujvari's girlfriend, who was staying with Carlin and would accompany her.

Carlin and Lauren's world was being rocked all right, but not in the way they were accustomed to. The family is very close and the policy of honesty between Dixon and Ujvari also extends to their children. The girls knew things were bad and while they tried to follow their mother's lead of keeping everything in control, it was extremely difficult to deal with the fact that the people they needed most in life were also in need.

It's one thing to live; it's another to deal with all the repercussions. Once the surgeons and doctors had done their job, it was time for Dixon to go to work. He had lost an eye and his body had withstood a massive assault. Unless he fought to regain mobility, the damages could be permanent.

With a fondness that cushions her words,

Ujvari says Dixon has always whined about the littlest things. "Now that he has something to truly whine about? Not a word. In the early days he went through absolute pain. It was excruciating. Yet he did his physiotherapy diligently and never took a day off and never complained."

Dixon smiles and says, "Sometimes when you get hit in the head with a flying car it puts things in perspective...."

"It feels better to do what needs to be done and get on with it without much fuss and bother."

Whenever he was low, he'd read the messages on his website from friends and fans. Ujvari says, "The night he read the guest book [on the website] I think it cemented in his mind that he owed it to these people to get back to being Carl."

In August the medical team had done what it could and Dixon was released from the rehabilitation centre. The surgeon who'd operated on his leg wanted Dixon nearby but Dixon couldn't contemplate any more time away from home. He and Ujvari spent their 16th anniversary in a plane on their way home.

The accident has solidified many things for Dixon, not least of which is the value of friends and community. Luke and Shelley Schell not only called them in Australia every day but also made sure everything was taken care of in Haliburton. "There wasn't anything I couldn't ask them," Ujvari says. Other friends did simple things, such as mowing the lawn, to remove any extraneous stresses. His mother, who spent some time at the house taking care of the girls, told them "You are blessed more than you know to have a community full of people like this."

The Carl Dixon who's playing guitar in the back yard is a remarkable sight because he doesn't look like a man who was crushed by a flying SUV. Sure, his long blond tresses – the only visible sign he is a rock musician – have been shorn and there's a new, careful attentiveness about him. But it's that spirit, combined with the talent you hear when he sings, that makes it clear that he'll let nothing stand between him and his goal of performing again.

Although he had never been the stereotypical rock musician, he realizes that all the trappings of that lifestyle were a shell. "All was stripped away" in the accident, he says, leaving him to ask, "What do I have left? What am I really?"

"My favourite quote is that adversity doesn't reform character, it reveals character.... My self-image was that I'm strong and capable and smart and yet for a while I couldn't even roll over without assistance. I saw deep love and compassion from other people."

"I feel pretty much the same person but I think I have a better appreciation of what's important. Even though I have a body that's battered and broken, I still feel immensely lucky that I have this beautiful family and amazing life."

For a chronicle of Dixon's life as a musician, and more photos from the accident, visit www.carldixon.com. Meanwhile, friends of his from the music industry are arranging a benefit concert at the Phoenix Club in Toronto on October 30. Visit www.fullmetalpackage.com.

The right stuff

NO ONE KNOWS HOW THEY'D REACT if they never got "the phone call" from police saying that someone they love has been in a terrible accident. Nor do they know how they'd cope with being the person the phone call was about. We all hope that we'd somehow know how to do what's right – or at the very least what's best – but who wants to be tested?

Our lives can change in seconds and we can never really prepare for what causes the change – the car accident or terminal disease or any of the bizarre twists of fate that fill our newspapers' pages. We can only hope that we'd react with the same strength and dignity to the family's temporary home in Daylesford on April 14. His own career as a musician was highly successful and he was about to fly back to North America for another gig as lead singer with The Guess Who. The family was in Australia because 12-year-old Lauren had earned a role in The Saddle Club television series. Dixon was in Melbourne to record one of his songs for the show. Older daughter Carlin was coping admirably with being on her own back in Haliburton (with support from family and friends) and his wife Betty was as much in love with him today as she was when they married 16 years ago.

All this got tossed upside down because of the accident. Every other measure of success seemed insignificant when compared to whether he'd live or die. And if he lived, what if he was permanently brain damaged or missing a few limbs?

Finding the answers to those questions took them on an incredibly hard journey but they stayed calm and in control, never letting circumstances overwhelm them. And while the journey is not over, they've realized that it's taken them to a pretty remarkable place in their lives. They've been made stronger because of adversity.

It's not luck that they've been able to survive such challenges. All along the way, even years before the accident, they made choices that would help them cope with whatever they were faced with. Dixon and Ujvari chose mates who were also their best friends, eschewing the trappings of a rock musician's lifestyle; he had chosen to live a healthy life, which helped his body heal; and they had become such an integral part of the community that when they needed a little help, the community responded with heartfelt enthusiasm.

Election coverage

There never seems to be enough pages in the Echo to properly cover everything that's going on in this busy county. As a result, some of our election coverage is being shared with the Minden Times. We will, however, post all election stories on both websites so you can stay better informed. As well, don't forget to attend this Thursday night is the all-candidates' meeting so you can ask your own questions.

Looking 'fore'ward to fall

Know when to fold them...

ISTOOD THERE ALONE and without hope. "There's no way I'll conquer this mountain," I muttered as I looked up and wiped off the sweat. But I knew I had to. Getting back to my family and home depended on it.

Desperate, I closed my eyes and recalled the sage advice bestowed upon me by my wife. "Start with the underwear. Always start with the underwear."

Those words, spoken by a loved one, provided all the inspiration I required. Suddenly, I found the strength and courage to move forward towards that mountain of dirty hunting clothes.

Within minutes, I was folding and packing those previously worn boxers neatly into my duffel bag. After that, I tackled the socks. Once I re-packed the hunting pants, I knew everything would be all right.

Sadly, not everyone is as fortunate. There are far too many outdoorsmen who succumb to this challenge each and every hunting season. This column is therefore dedicated to all those brethren who attempt to stuff all their dirty clothes back into the duffel bag, hoping, beyond all hope, that everything will fit inside of it once again.

Let's be honest – folding laundry is one of those things that we outdoorsy folks rarely talk about. Sure, we understand that at some point between here and hunt camp, each of us must face the dreaded beast. But we prefer not to dwell upon it. If we did, few of us would continue hunting. That's because we know that folding is a gateway chore to the harder stuff – actually doing laundry.

But learning how to fold clothing is an essential hunting skill. It allows you to bring back all the clothes that your wife folded in the duffel bag before your departure.

Obviously, this is no small feat.

My wife can place my entire hunting wardrobe including chest waders, boots, and insulated parkas in one medium-sized duffel bag. It's packed so tight that it has density approaching that found in a diamond. You actually need to stand out of the way when you unzip it or face serious injury.

Like most women, however, my wife has mastered the art of folding from a young age. And while, women have a genetic predisposition to this, it does not come so easily to men.

Horror stories abound. I once spent six hours entangled in a set of sweaty long johns after I lost my way during the second part of the folding sequence. Luckily, the woman who ran the lodge happened by; otherwise I might not be here to write these words.

Even so, with hours of practice and detailed instructions tattooed on the inside of each wrist, it's conceivable that a man can master the fundamentals of folding. Laugh all you like, but I've actually seen it.

Last week, a member of our bird-hunting group folded a bandana diagonally in half with surprisingly few complications and only light bruising as the rest of us looked on in utter amazement. Then he placed it in his duffel bag and it took up virtually no room at all. That, my friends, is the magic of folding.

Show me an outdoorsman who has mastered this skill and I'll show you a guy whose gear takes up less room in the truck or cabin. Which makes him highly desirable as a hunting partner for those who have not mastered folding.

It's not impossible, but it does take effort. Laundry? Now, that's impossible.

The sale

IT WAS WITH a combination of relief and dread that Victoria pushed open the door. Here it was, the cottage she had possessed for some thirty years. Past tense. This was her last weekend. In seven days it would belong to someone else.

Victoria had decided to sell the cottage at the end of the summer. Now that Mark was gone and the kids moved to the other side of the country, there was only her to do everything, pay for everything. And it had become more and more of a struggle walking up the hill from the lake. The view was spectacular but so also were the stairs and her legs were, well like many other parts, not what they used to be.

Now she smiled ruefully at that expression. "The old grey mare she ain't what she used to be." In the full flush of everlasting youth, Victoria had bounded up those stairs several times a day, hungry for lunch or the view or both. She had never imagined it would come to this: she feeling like an old horse with a body that didn't want to do it anymore.

So there was that feeling of relief, of not having to do any of it anymore. No more worries about eavestroughs and septs, foot valves and fuses, rising taxes and leaky roofs. Now when the weekend arrived she could putter around her home in the city rather than steeling herself for several hours of driving on highways where she often felt surrounded by people with a death wish. No more exaggerated gas expenses. No more road maintenance.

No more cottage. As she stood in the middle of her main living area – she had never called it a living room – she saw memories everywhere her gaze settled. The fireplace Mark had built with the help of a book and sheer determination over five weekends when they were first married. Beside it, the rocking chair from her mother in which Victoria had sat holding her children during thunder storms. The rug donated by Mark's parents on their first anniversary. The blackened spot where a spark from the fireplace had almost burnt down the place. And more, many more.

She felt her eyes begin to fill and turned instead to the kitchen, putting the few things she had brought into the frig. It was a pathetically small amount but then, she didn't need much for a two-day stay. Her last.

Despite reassurances from her real estate agent, Victoria hadn't really expected it to sell so quickly. It had taken her a year to make the decision and she thought it would take another year for it to sell. But four weeks after the signs went up there was an offer she couldn't refuse. Not that she would want to anyway. But still it seemed so final.

It was final. The enormity of that was settling in now. She felt as though a part of her life was being cut out and she couldn't decide if she felt lighter or lacking. Adjustments would have to be made. Of course the kids had not wanted her to sell. They saw the cottage as a potent symbol of their childhood and family time, something that would always be there for them whenever they returned. She had tried to explain to them that reality was harsher than memory, that her priorities had shifted. In the end they seemed to understand. It's never easy letting go. We all want to hang on to happy places because knowing they still exist somehow brings back the happy feelings, however fleeting.

It was a beautiful blue sky day and Victoria decided to go for a walk down the dappled cottage road. Her last walk. She wished she had a dog to keep her company as she kicked up the orange and yellow leaves. A car pulled up beside her and the driver looked like he wanted to speak.

It was the family who had bought her cottage. The man had seen her walk out of her laneway and realized who she was. They were staying with relatives on the lake. He was saying how excited they were, how they had fallen in love with her place the moment they saw it. Two young children sat in car seats in the back, their parents looking impossibly young. Everyone was smiling.

After they drove on, Victoria continued her walk. She felt she was leaving the cottage in good hands.

letters to the editor

Who are you bringing to town?

To the Editor:

Peterborough's MP is bringing the train to town. Muskoka's MP is bringing the G7 summit to town. What are you bringing to town Barry Devolin? You and your boss, Stephen Harper, are going to ease foreign ownership rules for airline and uranium industries – a disaster in the making for Haliburton County! How can he say he represents us in Ottawa when he is not representing our concerns pertaining to uranium mining? What are the true motives behind this change? It is sad enough that his government treats Ontario unfairly under the equalization schedule for transfer payment, for infrastructure and other medical and social costs, while still taking a disproportionate amount from this province every year in taxes!

Haliburton County residents, make no mistake, this change is being made to accelerate the rape of our land. Years ago, uranium mines were shut down – uranium leaches very easily into the soil – why are we now going there again?

I encourage everyone in Haliburton County to give very serious thought of who they will vote for on Oct. 14 – your choice may leave a devastating impact on Haliburton County.

A vote for Devolin is a vote for Harper

To the Editor:

There were many excellent letters to the editor in The Echo last week. I am sure there will be many more before this election is over.

I have been a supporter of the Progressive Conservatives in Ontario since I was 16, and federally in later years. While I think Barry Devolin has worked hard to serve his riding, under our system a vote for him would be a vote for George W. Harper and the Conservative-Reform-Alliance Party of Regressive Conservatives. That would only lead to more arrogant destruction of the parliamentary system. We can only hope that someone will start a Progressive Party to fight this scourge.

How ironic that when most Ontarians wanted to get rid of Premier Dalton McGuinty, Conservative leader John Tory manages to re-elect him with his school system ideas, and when most Canadians would like to dump Harper, we are offered the alternative of Dion and his too-complicated-to-explain carbon tax proposal. Only in Canada!

Way to go landfill employee for checking bags

To the Editor:

Hats off to the dedicated Kennisis Lake landfill employee for taking the initiative and time to search through some of the unsightly garbage bags illegally left at the entrance after hours in order to determine the person responsible. The municipality of Dysart et al must certainly take a stand in order to prevent this habit of some of the cottagers.

A fine is definitely in order and I would strongly suggest a number of community hours assisting at the landfill site be mandatory for anyone who can be traced to leaving garbage at the gates. How would Councillor Andrea Roberts react to an unknown person leaving a pile of garbage in her driveway? Would she not want to know the

Businesses need high-speed Internet

To the Editor:

Thank you for the recent article on a possible provincial grant for high-speed Internet. We have sent a letter to Leona Dombrowsky, Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs.

We strongly support the objectives of the Rural Connections Broadband Program to extend affordable, accessible and reliable broadband to rural areas. Haliburton County is exactly the type of region that could benefit significantly from this initiative. While, historically, economic development has been a challenge, with most of the jobs in seasonal industries, Haliburton's natural beauty and relative proximity to major urban areas means that it should be a natural location for the development of lots of digitally-based small businesses, creating new economic development for the area. Improved digital access would also mean improved access to lifelong learning and skill development, as well as greater social connectedness for residents.

We own property on Little Kennisis Lake in Haliburton County and would be very interested in operating small businesses from this location. But, presently, we are limited to dial-up telephone access to the Internet, which is glacially slow, and effectively prohibits doing business. We have explored ways to get improved Internet access but, given the very hilly geography, it seems that the only viable option to get high-speed access to our area is through a general plan to "wire" the area.

We have delayed our "permanent" move to the lake until we can have this service in place.

High-speed service would be a positive investment in critical infrastructure for Haliburton, leading to better jobs and economic development for the future. We would very much appreciate this support for our rural area.

name of the culprit and confront him or her? Would she be concerned about the privacy of such a person? Deputy-reeve Bill Davis suggests (before thinking it through, I am sure) that bylaw enforcement officers be hired to patrol the landfill entrances after hours. What an absurd idea! As a Kennisis Lake cottager for 40 years, I would object to that cost! You might as well hire the regular employee to work an extra shift and accept the garbage in the usual friendly, conscientious manner. On behalf of the cottagers who are fed up with these misfits who have no regard for their environment I say thank you to Bill Elliott and Scotty Morrison for pursuing this important matter.

strong sense of community. He's excited by the opportunity to bring his skills to a new organization.

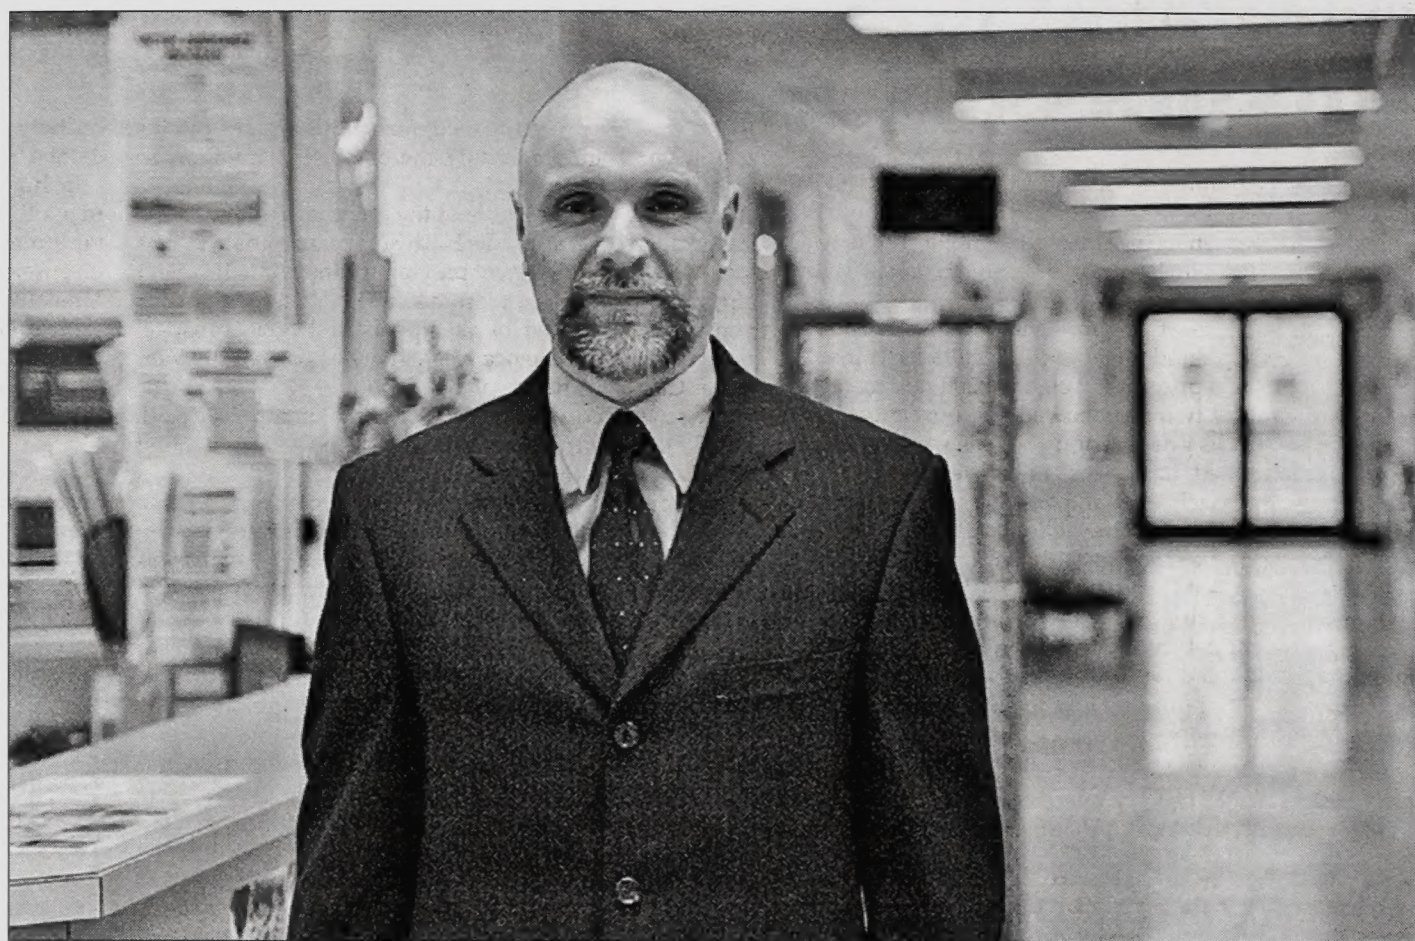

"As president and CEO you work in a team environment but you can use your skills and abilities for the greater good," he says. And nowhere can you make more of a difference in people's lives than health care.

"I really believe that if you want to have a positive impact on the community, the place to do it is with health care," he says. "[HHHS] is an integrated system and being able to work in that type of environment is a great challenge but if it's done right you can really make a difference."

He says one of his strengths is being able to manage all the different types of services so that there's a unified and cohesive approach. He says he does this through "positive communication, and making sure everyone's on track and in agreement with the values and goals.

"In health care and social services, what happens is you have a lot of responsibilities and not enough resources and it's easy to feel overwhelmed. But if you have a supportive organization that can help you." then you can better reach your goals.

Rosebush started his career as a social services professional with the Canadian Armed Forces. His father was an officer in the air force and military life had provided the family with experiences not available to many other people. When the family was stationed in Ottawa, for instance, young Paul got to go along to welcome the Queen when she arrived at the airport and, more importantly to him at the time, was there when the robot from the television show Lost In Space came for a visit. He also enjoyed attending the Governor General's birthday party.

It seemed natural to work with the armed forces. "It's just part of my family," he says. I was brought up in a culture of community service and being responsible to family, friends and community."

In 2001, he wanted his four children to have more of a permanent base and get to know their extended family more so they moved to Peterborough. (Rosebush's wife had two children from her first marriage and they have two children, all of whom are young adults now.) He worked briefly for the Durham Region's family services department before becoming executive director of Community Living for Ajax, Pickering and Whitby.

As thrilled as he is to be chosen as the new CEO of HHHS, he's also got his work cut out for him in the three months that he has left in Hay River. The agency has embarked on many projects which he's anxious to see brought to fruition.

He begins his new role in Haliburton County on January 1.

Canucks' website has positive things to say

It wasn't long before he was put to the rigorous NHL fitness tests. Hodgson rose to the challenge scoring better than average even in the dreaded stationary bike test that measures the efficiency of oxygen exchange with muscles.

There was a sense of accomplishment in the young man's voice as he shared a few of the results: he'd made 13 reps at the bench press at a weight of 200 pounds and his vertical jump of two feet showed just how much leg strength he had. His grip strength was his weakest test.

Hodgson described the on-ice drills as "regular drills to try and show the coach you can pass, shoot, and skate."

After the morning skate the following day Hodgson and the prospects headed east to Camrose, Alberta for two exhibition contests against the Calgary Flames and Edmonton Oilers – his first competitive games since July.

"It was good to get that [first game] over with," said Hodgson. "We started off a little slow, especially the first period, but once we got our feet moving we started to create a few more chances."

Despite the 6-3 loss to the Flames, Hodgson was deemed "impressive" in a Canucks website story. But it was in game two against Edmonton that Hodgson really stood out. "We played a lot better as a team in the second game," he said. "I felt a lot more relaxed."

It must have been the first-game jitters because in game two Hodgson earned the game's first-star honours, citing good chemistry with his linemates.

"I thought first stars were only on TV so I didn't actually know... It's nice to be recognized after a game but it's just one game and, hopefully, there will be many more to come."

It wasn't the bright lights of the arena or pulling on the Canucks jersey that made Hodgson realize that he was close to living his dream of playing for the NHL. It wasn't stepping onto the ice before his first NHL-type game or even when he scored or set up his first NHL prospect goal. His wow experience was when he boarded the Vancouver Canucks charter plane.

"I've never had an experience like that before," he said. "People take your jacket and hang it up for you. It's first class the whole way."

Hodgson played his two exhibition games with two different sets of line mates. In a post-game interview on Canucks.com, Canucks head coach Alain Vigneault was asked if it meant something that Hodgson played well in each game.

"A good player can make other guys look good," said Vigneault. "He's able to play with different teammates and be very useful on the ice and his teammates look good too. So it's very positive for him."

Those words were a good indication that Hodgson was on his way to Whistler, B.C. to attend the team's main camp beginning September 19.

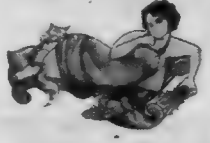

It was also reported that Vigneault felt that young players like Mason Raymond, Jannik Hansen, Hodgson and Michael Grabner could definitely make the team based on how they perform in the weekend in the exhibition games.

In his first NHL camp Hodgson has only one goal: make the team. And because he knows it's possible, the very mention of going back to the OHL was not up for discussion. "My focus right now is to try and make the Vancouver Canucks," he said. "I'm not really concerned with anything else right now. I'll just try my best out here at the camp and try and try to make it on the exhibition games and hopefully stick."

While the Echo doesn't want to print it any more than Hodgson wants to talk about it, if he doesn't make the cut Hodgson will head back to Brampton to join his friend and teammate Matt Duchene of Haliburton and the other members of the Brampton Battalion. Hodgson is not age-eligible to play for the Canucks farm team, the Manitoba Moose of the American Hockey League, since players must be at least 19 years of age.

REAL ESTATE UPDATE

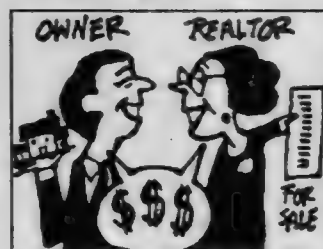

CHASING THE DREAM

QUESTION: What is your opinion about those get-rich-quick schemes in real estate that you see in books and on TV?

ANSWER: Although it is no secret that some people have done very well in buying and selling real estate, the vast majority have worked very hard at it, endured hardships along the way, and didn't make a lot of money overnight.

Most of the headline-grabbing gimmicks don't really work, or work in such rare instances that you could chase them without making a dime.

Consulting a real estate professional and getting tried and true assistance and advice is the way the vast majority make money in real estate.

THE SUREST way to make money in real estate is to get professional advice and assistance.

Do you need a little help with last month's rent?

The region's housing department has added a "last month's rent" loan assistance program to its existing arrears loan assistance program.

In addition, maximum amounts under the arrears program have been increased.

Since 2004, the City of Kawartha Lakes, which manages Haliburton County's social housing program, has received a total of $127,000 from the province to assist households facing eviction. To date the program has assisted approximately 50 people. Funds are still available to assist others.

The existing program had maximum loan amounts based on household type. The maximum loan amounts are now based on the current monthly rent. In addition, approximately $7,000 has been allocated for the creation of a "last month's rent" loan program. Low-income households can access the funding if they are unable to afford the last month rent deposit requested by many private landlords.

Both programs are interest-free loans and are open to residents of both the City of Kawartha Lakes and Haliburton County. Landlords must be involved in the process and funds can only be paid directly to the landlord.

Those seeking assistance through the arrears program must be facing eviction and the program cannot exceed two months of arrears.

Applications are available at www.city.kawarthalakes.on.ca/Community/HouseHome/SocialHousing/RentBank.htm or at the Haliburton County office on Newcastle Street in Minden.

Man fined for shoreland work

A Burlington man has been fined $1,000 for filling shorelands without a work permit.

James Coles, 60, pleaded guilty in court to the offence and was also ordered to remove the fill material.

Court heard that Coles had illegally deposited three truckloads of fill along the shore of Cranberry Lake, west of Eagle Lake. A work permit was not issued, as required by the Ministry of Natural Resources.

Justice of the Peace Linda Kay heard the case in the Ontario Court of Justice, Minden, on September 4, 2008.

To report a natural resources violation, call 1-877-TIPS-MNR (847-7667) toll-free any time or contact your local ministry office during regular business hours. You can also call Crime stoppers anonymously at 1-800-222-TIPS 8477.

Renovations going well, but still more to do

Calling all guys with trucks or trailers to join the cleaning bee

For some time now the brickwork near the back fire escape stairs at the West Guilford Community Centre has been disintegrating. The expense involved was going to be considerable, so for yet more months the project was delayed. (See story page 19.)

Thanks to all who participated in this renovation. Other renovations include fascia and eavestroughing in place and Emile Duchene's work to replace windows facing the ball diamond.

September 29 at 7:30 p.m. at the centre is now the date and time set for election of board officers. Please consider coming if only to observe and show an interest in support of the centre.

It is hoped that a cleaning bee can soon happen as well. Any guys with a truck and trailer available would be of

West Guilford hosts old-fashioned work bee

KIM HATTIN

Special to the Echo

The West Guilford School Community Centre has recently undergone some much-needed repairs thanks to a volunteered-based working bee.

For some time now, the committee in charge of running the centre has had three major goals. There were the broken windows that have now been replaced, new eavestroughing and fascia, and replacing the brick that suffered severe water damage for the last 30 years due to the lack of eavestroughs.

Bob Trudel, the owner of NorQuest Construction and a Grass Lake cottager, volunteered to take on the task of redoing the brick work.

A working bee was set up so the handy people of West Guilford could unite together to help save their building. Among the volunteers were Carol Stamp, Dave Walker, Luke Copper, Dan Johnson, Perry Morrison and Bob Trudel.

Before the working bee was planned, Carol Stamp had contacted Simcoe Block to purchase the brick. Trudel talked to Mark-Gariepy, manager of Simcoe Block, and had them donate the materials needed for the job. CRF donated the required scaffolding.

This working bee was greatly needed after the centre's main fundraiser, bingo, had to be dropped. The committee is now relying on the support of the community to keep the doors open.

In the past, the centre committee has had the upstairs redone, turning the old classrooms into a functioning hall complete with a full kitchen, where banquets and dances can be held.

The next project is to renovate the downstairs, where a pub atmosphere will create a new space for a fun night of card games and darts. The new downstairs will also be a banquet space. The kitchen has already been remodelled and Brad Sales of Cordell Carpets has given the centre 50 per cent off the cost of the paint.

The next working bee has been postponed due to lack of volunteers. Carol Stamp says, "We are looking for strong arms to help clean out the downstairs."

The Lions Club puts the scare back in scarecrow

MATT JAMES

Staff Reporter

Marilyn Frost knows how to put the scare into a scarecrow.

For an hour on Friday afternoon, she surprised and delighted the crowd of people who gathered at the Village Barn for the Haliburton BIA's first scarecrow contest. By dressing up as a scarecrow, and moving only when someone approached, she stole the show and earned the Haliburton Lions Club first place in the contest.

With 25 entries, judges Aggie Tose, Roxanne Casey, Joan Ward, and Laura Smith had their work cut out to choose the top three to share the $175 in prize money.

Organizer Mary McKee was very pleased with the inaugural contest.

"I'm absolutely overwhelmed at the participation and the amount of people who came out to see the scarecrows," said McKee. "I'd like to thank everyone for participating. We're looking forward to a bigger and better one next year."

A second place prize of $50 went to the 4Cs Lily Ann and the $25 third place prize went to Tristen Cook and Tammy Henry.

Look for more photos of the various entries, as well as details of the Fall Festival on October 4, in next week's Fall Tour supplement.

Friends Tammy Henry and Tristen Cook entered the contest and won third place.

Over 50 golfers help out curlers community news

Hilda Clark
448-2018

The Jack Ward Memorial Golf Tournament was once again a fun event. Over 50 golfers participated in this annual fundraiser for the Wilberforce Curling Club. Enjoying the wonderful weather, they played this mixed, nine hole, best ball tournament at Martin Wood Golf Course on Saturday September 20.

Following golf and a good meal back at the Curling Club prizes were awarded. Winning the trophy for top spot was the Betty Irvine team which included Bob Thompson, Albert Thompson and Lyle McConnell. Congratulations to the winners. It was good to have Colleen Ward and her guests taking part. Thanks and congratulations to Tammy Vaughan for coordinating this successful event.

Best wishes are extended to Gertrude (Young) Godfrey who recently celebrated her 80th birthday. A fine party in her honour took place on Sunday, September 21, at the Wilberforce Legion. Family and friends attended making it a great celebration. Gertrude and her late husband Royce resided in Wilberforce for many years raising their families here and being a good part of the community. May Gertrude celebrate many more birthdays happily and in good health.

Legion Week began with a church parade. On Sunday, September 21, members of branch 624 attended a service at the Wilberforce United Church. The service was led by Rev. David Watson. Several of the legion people joined the congregation for luncheon after the service.

Fred Tuesink and his mother Hilda Tuesink recently enjoyed some time visiting in the Eliot Lake area where Hilda resided for a number of years.

St. Margaret's welcomed John Stouffer as guest speaker at the morning service on Sunday September 21, 2008

Several people from this area visited the Bancroft Quilt Show last week. They were greatly impressed with all the excellent pieces that were on display.

The Wilberforce School staff and students will be having an open house this Tuesday, September 23. This is a great opportunity for families and teachers to meet socially and for teachers to share a general overview of curriculum and class expectations.

The fine weather was a boon for Heritage Day at the Highland Grove Community Centre last Saturday, September 20. Those attending not only were reminded of the history of the area through pictures and the well organized information compiled on pioneer families, they also enjoyed live music, tasty food from the barbecue and some bargains from the yard sale. Appreciation is extended to the volunteer organizers.

Valerie French reported a beautiful and unusual sight as she visited my place last Saturday morning. Standing like a statue, elegantly erect on the peak of the barn behind my house was a magnificent blue heron. It was so still she thought a new weather vane had been installed. Then the great bird took wing and flew away. I was sorry to have missed this bird whose kind are more usually seen wading in solitary fashion in some quiet waterway.

Another recent sighting, unusual in this area, was a pheasant. Observed strolling quietly on a well-kept lawn near some cedars, it then stopped to preen its feathers. We won't mention the location of this sighting lest some one might prefer it "under glass" rather than wandering majestically free.

Cut a trail with Trails and Tours this weekend

Come out and join the Trails and Tours Network and Gooderham Community Action Group which are banding together to create the Gooderham Community Trail.

Volunteer duties will include lifting sod, laying gravel, handing out water, bridge repairs, etc. This is a great opportunity for students to get their volunteers hours and is also a great family activity. So come on out and help out these great organizations develop a trail.

Are you interested but need a ride? Give Trails and Tours a call or send them an email.

Dates: September 27 and 28

Place: Gooderham Community Park

What you will need to bring:

- Working gloves
- Closed toed shoes (preferably steel toed work boots)
- As well as your friends and family!

BIRRELL, Primrose Margaret (nee Bigsby) - Born June 19, 1923 in Simla, India and died quietly in the palliative care unit of Peterborough Regional Health Centre, on Monday, September 15, 2008, after a long and varied journey through life. Sister to Jack and daughter of Sydney Herbert Bigsby CIE and Evelyn Margaret Baker, Primrose was sent to boarding school in England at the age of four, as was the custom at the time, seeing her parents on annual holidays when possible and staying with friends or relatives when not. On graduation and the outbreak of war, she returned to her parents in India in 1939 and joined the army, rising to the rank of Sergeant. She met and soon married Major Andrew Bruce Birrell (d. April, 2007) in 1942 at Lahore Cathedral and honeymooned in Kashmir. After periods in India, England and Singapore, Bruce and Primrose moved with their two eldest children, Rod (Veronica) and Tony, to Sarnia where Syd (Pamela) and Diana were later born. After periods in Montreal and Bangladesh, Bruce and Primrose lived in Toronto and Haliburton, where they had a cottage on Soyers Lake and a wide circle of friends. Primrose was a devoted wife and mother, a beloved grandmother of Rebecca, Ben, and the late James, a true friend, a kind and fun-loving spirit, and with spare time in retirement, a painter of considerable talent. Her final years were clouded by Alzheimer's disease. Thank you, Mum, bon voyage and a bientot. A memorial service has been held in MURRAY STREET BAPTIST CHURCH, Peterborough. If desired, condolences to the family may be made at www.CommunityAlternative.ca or by calling COMMUNITY ALTERNATIVE FUNERAL HOME at 705-742-1875. Donations in Primrose's memory can be made to the cause of her grandson by mail to: The James Fund, 625 Whitaker Street #4, Peterborough, ON, K9H 7L5, or on-line through www.JamesFund.ca

In memoriam

In loving memory of a beloved Daughter Sister, and Aunt Bea Hillis who passed away September 19, 2007.

*The blow was great, the shock severe:
I little thought the end was near Only those who have lost can tell How sad it is parting and no farewell
But God in goodness, comforts me
To bear my bitter cross
He is the only one who knows How heavy is my loss.*

Lovingly remembered by Mom and Family

TRUMBULL, Betty - In loving memory of a wonderful wife, mother, and grandma who passed away one year ago on September 18, 2007

*A wife, a mother, a grandma too,
This is the legacy we have from you.
You taught us love and how to fight,
You gave us strength, you gave us might.
A stronger person would be hard to find,
And in your heart, you were always kind.
You fought for us all, in one way or another,
Not just as a wife, not just as a mother.*

Gone from sight, but forever remembered in our hearts
